One Sunday morning, strong wind came suddenly. It carried many things up the sky. The children saw a red piece of cloth flying in the air. "Look, that is Kiti's uniform," Grace shouted. The children stopped playing. One of them asked, "What shall we do?" They all ran after the dress, looking up and shouting, "Dress come down! Dress come down!"

The dress did not come down. Instead, the dress fell on a branch of a tall tree. Kiti was worried.

"How will I go to school tomorrow?" She asked her friends. Grace told Kiti that she could borrow her other uniform.

Karisa, one of the boys looked up the tree and smiled. "Do not worry Kiti. I will get it for you," he said. He then climbed the tree and shook the branch where the dress was. As the dress was coming down, all the children jumped up and down in praise of Karisa singing, "Bravo! Bravo! Bravo!"
